Hello Corvinus!

Dear University Citizens,

As you’ve already heard, last week the first coronavirus cases were registered in Hungary as well. Currently, the best defense against the virus is prevention. It is therefore important to keep ourselves to the hygienic standards, cancel all trips to highly affected areas and reconsider every step that might pose an unnecessary risk.

With that in mind, as a precaution to minimalize potential risk the leadership of the University has decided to delay all events for an indefinite period that were planned to be held on university premises, which aren’t directly linked to the University’s core activity (i.e. education) and would have fifty or more participants. The restriction only applies to events held in University buildings.

All events with 50 or more participants that would take place before April 30, 2020 will therefore be delayed, while new bookings of rooms will only be accepted if the expected number of participants at the event is below 50.

We would like to once again remind you that this restriction does not apply to core activities, all lectures and seminars will still be held.

As a further preventive measure, the leadership also decided to suspend all reading room services of the University Library for an indefinite period. Borrowing is still possible, but the Reading Rooms cannot be used until further notice.

We ask our students, teachers and employees considering the situation, not to visit any of the affected areas in the near future. A list of countries that have registered cases so far can be found here.

We recommend you to take into careful consideration any other travel abroad, as well as gaining further information about the situation there! If the trip can’t wait, we highly recommend you to gain further information about the situation from the WHO’s constantly updating website and advised to register at Consular Services.

In case you have further questions regarding the procedure, feel free to contact our colleagues at coronavirusinfo@uni-corvinus.hu.

Let’s take care of ourselves and each other!

Corvinus Communications